Debby Chase Putman
(Debby Ann Chase, pen name D. A. Chase)

I was born in Santa Monica, CA and lived in the same city house, three miles from the ocean until college took me to Cal Poly San Luis Obispo, CA. I graduated in Business, married and lived off the land in many states while raising a family. Having moved back to California, I married again creating a yours, mine, and ours set of ten kids. With all the children grown and spread across the country, we now live in the mountains of Liberty Lake, WA.

My joy is creating the Darcy and Dawn's Impossible Adventures series and stories with illustrations by my eldest son Ryan Francis Peirce and website developed by my middle son Jeffery Peirce

The middle of five kids: I have a lot to draw from for my characters. Growing up near the California Coast in the 1960s, my younger sister Donna and I created adventures, some of which I am happy to share with kids of today. Neither one of us liked to read as children, and yet, as we learned to love it for the fantasy and understanding of the world around us, we realized how much we had missed in those early years. So, these stories are for those kids like us, who just need an adventurous story to spark a lifelong interest in reading.

My hobby for over twenty-five years has been building every branch of the family tree. I have written the histories of two of these family lines dating back to the 1300s. Sharing stories is my passion.

Stories of a Swedish Elf

Tons of fantasy for Gus to learn!

Gus, an eleven-year-old tomte, grandson of the absent but famous Gustaff the Adventurer, feels he is all on his own, yet determined to learn all the magic he can to become a somebody himself. A Tomte's job is to take care of all animals, and therefore he aims high, to be 'The Greatest Tomte of all Times' no less.

He struggles with being seen as odd, because he loves to read, and he is a goner for the smell of fresh baked cardamom bread.

So, he makes an adventure out of learning human magic, like maps and coordinates, following a recipe (included) and getting along people, and the grand lessons of taking on the Winds to protect the animals, Nordic folkloric beings, and even other tomtar who make bad decisions, writing it all down in his journal.

Then Gus finds that his grandfather had written stories, and gave them to Mormor, who sent them in letters to her granddaughters Darcy and Dawn, mere humans! Maybe fame and importance are not in his future? Or maybe . . . it might look a little different from his expectations. Fun for all ages!
