Overnight, the serene coastal town of Bellingham, Washington erupts into a battleground as a deadly pathogen sweeps through the state, claiming thousands of lives and prompting the Governor to declare Phase Zero, a statewide lockdown. Amid the turmoil, Max Maddison strives to reunite with his loved ones while evading ruthless gutter punks, a squad of deputies commanded by a menacing sheriff, and a sinister funeral home director who's nipping at his heels.

Even with Max's trusty SUV—affectionately named the Beast—and the unwavering support of his fearless childhood friend Carter, this is a formidable challenge for a twenty-two-year-old plagued by thanatophobia, the intense fear of death. You better buckle your seatbelt and hold on for your life, as this adrenaline-fueled adventure will be an uphill bloody fight.

Max Maddison survived the unthinkable. He and his friends defeated an evil plot that ravaged his home state of Washington, and weeks later, life is just starting to feel normal again. But peace isn't as simple as flipping a switch—especially for Max.

At least the bloody fiasco is behind him, right?

Wrong.

Max's old boss Jim is back, and he's not just rebuilding—he's raising an army. And guess what's in his arsenal? The Beast—Max's beloved Suburban. Oh, and there's more—something strange is brewing in the desert, far to the south.

Max and his friends better gear up for another fight—this time, not only for their lives or their loved ones, but for the fate of the world.
